Kim Talks Fashion, Family & Studying Law

Raising four kids—North, 6, Saint, 3, Chicago, 20 months, and Psalm, 4 months—with husband Kanye West hasn't slowed down reality star Kim Kardashian West, 38. This month, she's launching a shapewear brand, Skims, while continuing to apprentice at a law firm.

The West Bunch

The star (with, from left, Saint, Psalm, Chicago and North) says the older kids are "obsessed" with their new little brother.

What inspired Skims?

I feel like I've been designing shapewear for 15 years. I'd bring scissors, a needle and thread when I traveled to cut and sew pieces into my own. I used tea bags to dye them a deeper color because there was only one standard nude.

I wanted something that would smooth my shape but not necessarily change it. I do have cellulite. But I try to be easy on myself, because you're never going to be perfect.

What do your sisters think of it?

"I designed Skims to enhance all body types," she says.

They genuinely love it, which makes me so proud since they're all different shapes and sizes.

How's being a mom of four?

It's exhausting! Everyone loves Psalm, and everyone is helpful. He looks a little bit like Chi and a little bit like Saint, but he's changing.

How do you relax? I got into CBD [cannabidiol, a legal compound found in the cannabis plant] a few months ago. I'm not a weed smoker at all, but I love CBD. It's gotten me through a lot.

You're studying for the bar exam in 2022. Why go into law?

My dad [attorney Robert Kardashian] always knew I was interested in law school. He said [being a lawyer] was way too stressful as a full-time job, so I'd really have to think about it. When he worked on the defense team for the O.J. Simpson case, I looked through the evidence books. [My sister] Kourtney would always yell at me like, "Get out of his stuff! Why do you care?" I learned a lot from him telling me about it. Now I want to become a lawyer to help people who can't really help themselves.

Cheryl Became an Angel

In 1977 Cheryl Ladd, then 26, replaced Farrah Fawcett on Charlie's Angels in the show's second season. At the time, Ladd (who had welcomed daughter Jordan with first husband David Ladd in 1975) was nervous, telling People: "I've had visions of... having people stop me and say, 'Who do you think you are, trying to take Farrah's place?'" But she became a beloved cast member until the series' end in 1981. Ladd, now 68, still acts and has been married to second husband Brian Russell for 38 years. And in November another movie reboot of the franchise, starring Kristen Stewart, will hit theaters.
